“We’re lost but we’re making good time.”

-Yogi Berra

I’ve got an anniversary coming soon.
Forty-seven years married to a beautiful, brilliant, kind, and thoughtful woman whom I love deeply. I have no idea how she does it!

We cast our lines in 1979 and have been plying unknown waters ever since, somehow making headway toward a new and yet unknown anchorage—perhaps a new winter harbor? Grateful and enjoying most of the ride, we have often found ourselves drifting in fog, off course from headwinds, currents, tides, or storms. But more often than not, we bask under blue skies with fresh breezes with stunning views and sights of awe. We’ve welcomed aboard beloved shipmates, friends, and guides who still travel with us for a time. There are times we drift with neither wind nor power, and times when we strain we all the rigging of our little boat. Yeeeeee Haa! We may know neither our current fix nor our destination, but we are not lost; we are right where we belong- together and making good time! I would take that voyage again and again.

Happy Thinksday.
